LENTIS®_{Comfort} – Advanced technology
 intraocular lens for cataract patients

WHICH LENS FOR WHICH QUALITY OF VISION?

WHAT DO PATIENTS SAY?

Standard:

Good distance vision

Reading glasses and varifocals necessary

Comfort with extended depth of focus:

Sharp distance and good intermediate vision

In some cases reading glasses might be necessary

Sarah Harper

56 year old with multiple sclerosis

(Condition: severe short sightedness)

"I could see the bird feeder in the garden – about 12 meters from the window – in focus for the very first time. I could see texts on my phone for the first time in 10 years and I can read my watch – it's been years since I have been able to use it properly. I still haven't lost the wonder of the fact I can wake up and see. I don't think I will ever stop being thankful that, for the first time in 30 years, as I have gradually lost the use of my body, a part of me has actually been fixed."

Brendan Moriarty

Consultant Ophthalmic Surgeon

(Condition: Cataract)

"I have been using the LENTIS Comfort and I am enormously impressed with the outcomes and the levels of spectacle independence that this gives to my patients. I have had these lenses implanted in both my eyes and am delighted with the outcome. I can wholeheartedly recommend this intraocular lens for suitable patients."

The easy lens solution for you

Implantation of a standard lens is the best possible cataract treatment for those who do not mind wearing glasses after their surgery; however, it is not the best possible solution for those who wish to become more independent from their glasses.

The tried and tested LENTIS® Comfort lens is adjusted optimally to the intermediate range and thus has been particularly successful in meeting the demanding needs that most patients have with the results of cataract surgery.

The LENTIS® Comfort offers both good intermediate as well as distance vision, due to its advanced technology. This is especially of importance to cataract patients who want greater spectacle independence in everyday situations, such as using the computer, handling their smartphone, shopping, golfing or driving. Generally, all people who carry out manual activities further away than reading distance will benefit from this perfectly tailored lens.

In short: The perfect lens solution for everyday situations!
